Who are we?

We are a diverse group of dedicated high school students motivated to connecting and empowering young hackers everywhere.

Why sponsor?

Young Hacker hackathons are the definitive high school hackathons. They're where high school students can develop their passion for computer programming. Our goal is to help as many high school students as possible fall in love with programming and help them enter the digital space.

We have hosted 4 hackathons thus far with over 600 student attendees with a wide range of amazing sponsors — including All Star Code, General Assembly, Google, AlleyNYC, The Knowledge House, Twilio, and Girls Who Code, and have partnered with Major League Hacking and Spotify to host these events. Sponsoring Young Hacker hackathons will allow you to be a part of a powerful new social initiative and to empower high school students with the tools and vital knowledge of the 21st century.

High school students from all over the northeast region come together, despite their differences, to create something awesome. Come and be a part of it.
